

School psychologist:

He is a qualified and specialized person who helps the learner understand himself and helps him take action His decisions and solving his problems, and it also helps him understand and analyze his aptitudes, abilities, and potentials

His inclinations, the opportunities available to him, his needs, and the use of his knowledge in conducting tests and taking decisions to achieve compatibility, and it also provides specialized assistance to learners, whether they are individuals or...groups.

Duties of the school psychologist:

From the above, the tasks of the psychologist can be defined as follows:

- Diagnosing school disorders, crises, and behavioral problems of students.

Studying the learning environment (good and not so good)

- Studying the problems resulting from the academic curricula and curricula was difficult or far from it.

Students' interests, as well as the length and difficulty of the curriculum.

Practicing some types of psychological therapy with students who show some difficulties Behavioral.

- Consultation with parents and teachers about classroom problems.

Applying intelligence tests to determine the mental level of students and estimate the child's achievement ability.

- It studies the causes of academic failure (lack of adaptation, dropout, tardiness...)

- Recognizes the tendencies and interests of students

Methods used by the school specialist:

Observation-clinical interview-Psychological tests.

The role The role of the psychologist.

his services are not only directed to students who suffer from some psychological and behavioral problems, but they are also directed to students to invest their energy and develop their personality aspects. The school psychologist performs several roles, including discovering creative and innovative people to develop their personality aspects. The school psychologist performs several roles, including discovering the creative, inventive, and gifted students. He holds personal interviews with students, some teachers, and parents, and using appropriate tools and tests, he discovers the creative and innovative students in various fields, as well as the gifted and academically gifted, and works to develop these aspects in them. The school psychologist does the same Preparing behavior modification programs that suit the school community and the school day, and the school must confront them, such as school violence, academic delay, and the causes of school dropout. The psychologist within the school context also has a role in the experience of integrating people with special needs into the educational system. Integration is defined as providing the opportunity for children and students with disabilities to engage in the education system as a measure to ensure On the principle of equal opportunities within the framework of human rights, children's rights, and the rights of people with special needs, and to prepare all students in a comprehensive educational manner, which has its advantages and disadvantages, and the role of the psychologist is essential to maximize the positives, overcome the negatives, and ensure that the conditions that must be met for the success of the experiment are met.